The tradeoff in production can then be framed as a choice between capital and consumer goods, which will become relevant later. Therefore, this example will also adopt guns and butter as the axes for the production possibilities frontier. Technically speaking, the units on the axes could be something like pounds of butter and a number of guns.

How to Graph and Read the Production Possibilities Frontier

The distribution of stone axes is an important indication of prehistoric trade. [original research?] Thin sectioning is used to determine the provenance of the stone blades. In Europe, Neolithic "axe factories", where thousands of ground stone axes were roughed out, are known from many places, such as: Great Langdale, England

AXE THROWING by TOYSMITH | Barnes & Noble®

In world trade equilibrium, wages are the same in home and foreign,  $w = w^$ . What good(s) will Home produce? What good(s) will Foreign produce? Each country's production is determined by comparing the unit production costs, or  $a_i \times w$  vs.  $a_i^ \times w^*$ , for each good  $i$ . Whichever country has the lower unit production costs will produce the good.
